Sustaining Earth, Sustaining Soul

Man feels himself isolated in the cosmos. He is no longer involved in nature and has lost his emotional participation in natural events, which hitherto had a symbolic meaning for him.

C.G. Jung (CW 18, par. 585)

Lecture -- Friday evening 7 to 9 pm

Living sustainably means living in a supportive and co-creative balance with Nature. Psychologically, living in balance with the world brings with it a feeling of inner wholeness. Thus, healing our outer disconnection with Nature creates healing within us. We truly experience the interconnected web of life. Often the busy world we live in pulls us away from this experience of interconnectedness with the world. Carl Jung recognized that the seemingly separate inner and outer worlds were really one world, the Unus Mundus. In this presentation, I will reflect on how Jungian psychology leads to an understanding of how we became separate from Nature and how this same psychological view can lead us back to becoming a part of Nature. We will also look at the concept of the world soul or Anima Mundi and deepen our awareness of how we can sustain the world's soul and our soul as one soul.

Workshop -- Saturday morning 9am to noon

In this workshop we will explore how Jungian psychology can help us heal the apparent split between humans and Nature. We will look at how to live a more balanced life, and explore new ways of living sustainably and soulfully. Jungian-inspired practices, such as active imagination, dream work, and working with film images, will allow us to explore the unity of both inner and outer worlds. Our goal will be to truly experience our interconnected web of life
