Martha Thompson has been an Art Therapist and practicing artist for over thirty years. She has worked in the entire range of behavioral health treatment facilities in three states of Michigan, Texas, and Arizona.

Art Therapy was a new field when she was introduced to it as an undergraduate at Miami University. There were very few places to learn it. She learned the field via community and hospital internships and completed her Masters degree at Vermont College. She has worked in many treatment facilities in Tucson since 1991.

As an artist, Thompson is most comfortable and proficient in drawing. She observes and draws a plant through its reproductive cycle. She also practices portrait and figure drawing and has recently started doing court illustration during real trials.

Thompson has long been involved with a Jungian approach to understanding herself and those she works with in treatment. She has used Jungian techniques such as sandtray, mask making, and improvisation in her work with others. She has been involved with SAFOJ for over ten years.
