Jungian Analyst Sylvia Simpson, MD, is a Jungian Analyst and Psychiatrist. Sylvia hails from Canada, where she attended University and Medical School and practiced as a Family Physician. She trained in Psychiatry at the Johns Hopkins Hospital and, as a member of the Staff there, worked with individuals with depression and bipolar disorders. Sylvia's introduction to Arizona was 30 years ago when she helped conduct an injury study requested by the Hopi Tribe. She and her husband moved to Denver where Sylvia trained as an Analyst through the Inter-Regional Society of Jungian Analysts. In her practice she combined Psychiatry and Jungian analysis. She moved to Tucson in late 2010 and is in the process of establishing a practice here.

Film Buff Nancy Solomon studied film history and filmmaking at Wells College and video production at Pima College. She was founding president of Video Art Network, which created fifty programs about video artists and their work; VAN also taught local artists video production skills, allowing them to serve as crew for each other in creating new pieces. She had Pandora Productions, her own video production company from 1987 to 1997; Pandora produced both video art works and documentary interview programs on the arts. Solomon has been a member of many film discussion groups over the years. She was Director of Publications for the Center for Creative Photography and still freelances as a publishing consultant.
